

“All things are created
twice,
first in someone’s head,
then in reality”

MEDIA RELEASE: August 16th , 2012

There is a paradigm shift in ideas in disability service delivery taking place. Individualised funding, self managed funding, NDIS are all setting up for a once in a lifetime generational change and a genuine understanding that no longer will people be told what services they must have or how they will be delivered. That innovation will be promoted and actively encouraged fills many of us with great optimism. Choice, partnerships, joint ventures and entrepreneurs will be the buzz words of the sector.

What is sure to start as a drip, turn into a pond and eventually a torrent means that clients, carers and families will be able to set out in achieving their dreams (we will ignore at this stage that the government has yet to guarantee any extra money)

How to do that will be a new experience and a challenge for many. Using the innovative and already widely acclaimed Kardinya pilot program as a case study IDASA will be holding a community conference to focus on this challenge. Please circulate this information widely for what is sure to be a successful day.
